TWO BIG NOVELS READY SOON

By the author of The Prodigal Judge, The Just and the Unjust, etc.

THE HAND OF THE MIGHTY

Vaughan Kester

RARE examples of the narrator's art are these fascinating stories from the pen of Vaughan Kester, the man who wrote THE PRODIGAL JUDGE, THE JUST AND THE UNJUST, etc., and through them charmed the reading world as has no other recent author of fiction. The delicate humor, the gentle pathos, the tender sentiment, the gripping interest and truthfulness to life which characterize his novels, likewise stamp these stories with the mark of high genius and bring to them a value which of itself is sufficient to demand the attention of all those who love a story for the story's sake.

Uniform with "The Prodigal Judge." 452 pages. $1.35 net.

As fascinating as Trilby and A Parisian Romance. A triumphant American prima donna in Paris, an American, and a French prince—who is a real hero, give the story genuine distinction.

War Time in Manila

By Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske

This is one of the very few war-books in the English language actually written on the spot at the time of the fighting, by an officer in the regular service. The descriptions are painstakingly correct, and yet the story is vivid in the highest degree, because of the restrained enthusiasm of the author and the clearness of his diction. This is easily the most important contribution to the history of the war with Spain that has yet appeared.

"The Most Profoundly Interesting Novel of the Times"

Mr. Winston Churchill's The Inside of the Cup

By Winston Churchill, Author of "Richard Carvel," "The Crossing," "The Crisis," "Coniston," "Mr. Crewe's Career," "A Modern Chronicle," etc.

What Leading Reviewers say:

IN LONDON

"Abounds in thoughtful delineation of character, presents certain salient aspects of city life with fidelity and restraint, while the interwoven love story offers, in its refined and spiritual intensity, a refreshing contrast to much that is overheated in the fiction of the day."
—The Times (London).

IN BOSTON

"Bigger and broader than anything Mr. Churchill has yet written . . . this novel is destined to be of importance among thinking people . . . worth reading for its pure English, for the enjoyment of a story well-told, for what it teaches, and a careless world might do well to learn what it teaches."
—Boston Globe.

IN PHILADELPHIA

"One of the most thoughtful, best conceived books of Mr. Churchill's career . . . a keenly analytical presentation of American social problems . . . of absorbing interest as a record of contemporary thought . . . a purposeful book."
—Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

IN NEW YORK

"Those who are interested in present-day currents of thought will read this book with profound interest and will be thankful that Mr. Churchill was moved to write it. . . . The stage setting and the actors are typical of American present-day civilization."

IN CHICAGO

"Indubitably its author's greatest achievement . . . eager sincerity lends it conviction . . . strength, simplicity, true greatness . . . excellence of construction. It is not often that a novelist can at once induce thought and challenge and disarm controversy."
—Chicago Record-Herald.

IN SAN FRANCISCO

"A fine piece of work, palpitating with conviction. . . . It is 'Robert Elsmere' from a new angle, written with the virility that we have learned to associate with Mr. Churchill." —The Argonaut.

THE FREIGHT RATE ON BOOKS AS WASTE PAPER.

THE letter of Mr. W. R. Barnes, reprinted elsewhere in this issue of THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY brings up a very interesting and pertinent question. That books which have no value other than as waste paper should be charged a freight rate amounting to more than that waste paper value, is on the face of it, absurd. Yet we do not know that at present any publishing house secures the lower rate. Application to a trade authority who, as THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY happened to know, had made a special investigation of this very point some years ago brought forth the following reply:

"I believe that railroads place paper stock in third or fourth class, according to certain conditions; but railroads would not accept shipments of paper or books as paper stock unless they were satisfied that the classification was right. Probably evidence of this would be the amount of shipments, the business of the consignee, and the character of the packages, etc. I believe that one stipulation was that this stock should be in bales or bags. It would probably be quite impossible for a bookseller to send books, however valueless, to a publisher, in a wooden box under the classification of paper stock."

We should be interested to hear if any publishing house is at present shipping books to be "pulped" at waste paper rates.

The United States Supreme Court has yet to hand down its decision on the Macy case in respect to copyright books, in which formally only a legal technicality is involved, so that the decision may be indecisive unless, as is possible, the court of highest jurisdiction takes or makes opportunity to go wider afield and render a decision which will cover broadly the whole issue and be a final settlement of a vexed question. Whatever may be the outcome of this suit, the trade cannot but be interested from time to time in the endeavors made in other directions to maintain prices whether by legal methods or in the course of ordinary business operation. One of the most successful developments of modern manufacture under the protection of patent monopoly has been the production of the Victor Talking Machine and Victrola, and the Victor Records. Originally it was sought to enforce maintenance of prices by legal means; but of late years more emphasis seems to have been placed on business arrangements which will give to agents reasonable surety in their respective fields. The parent company is a manufacturing concern and sells only at wholesale. All the retail stores are independent affairs, licensees of the parent company. It is the practice of the company to license a number of agents in a great city without exclusive territory, but usually with stores not too near each other on the same thoroughfare. Prices are the same at each agency, as the relations are always direct between the agency and the parent company; and fixed prices are easily maintained. If the agency breaks these prices, the agent cannot purchase more machines or records.

THE July issue of the Australian Bookfellow, in editorial comment upon the May convention of the American Booksellers' Association, calls the attention of the Australian book-trade to the need of establishing an Australian Bookselling Association. "It would be a good thing for Australasian bookselling," says the Bookfellow, "if some such gathering were held annually in these countries. In some cities and towns there is no bookselling association at all—every man fights for his own hand at every encounter. In other cities the loose associations are riven by jealousies, quarrels, and breaches of agreement. Yet there is continual necessity for the adjustment of trade attitudes, for the decision of trade disputes, and for the establishment of trade standards. That which individual booksellers, or the booksellers of a single city, are unable to accomplish, might well be accomplished by the united resolution of the booksellers of Australia and New Zealand. A standard of trade or uniformity of practice is required, for example, in relation to: 1. The marketing system. 2. The advance on net prices. 3. Prices of fiction. 4. Conditions of reprint issue. 5. Discounts and rebates. 6. 'Indecent' books—and other matters that will readily suggest themselves. The position of Australasian booksellers, in relation to British and American exporting publishers, is exceptional; and every bookseller has evidence that the nature and conditions of our trade, and its peculiarities due to the geographical situation of these countries, are frequently misunderstood both in Britain and America—not only by newly-established firms, but by some of the older ones." From the tone of the Bookfellow's comment one might judge that only too many of the Australian trade were now more or less at swords' points: all the more reason why, as it well says, an association that would eliminate such differences should be formed.

THE removal of the H. W. Wilson Company of Minneapolis, from that city to the suburbs of New York City marks an epoch in its successful history. New York City is unquestionably the center of the country's publishing interests at this time, and seems destined to remain so for many years to come. It became increasingly difficult for the Wilson Company to carry on its rapidly growing business in any inland city, however important; and the move to New York has seemed to it for some time past an inevitable one. THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY feels sure that in welcoming it to the local circle—as it does most cordially—it expresses the unanimous sentiment of the metropolitan trade.

THE SCIENTIFIC ANTIQUARIAN BOOKTRADE.

BY ADOLPH GROWOLL.*

THE publishing, bookselling and antiquarian trades are closely related. Equally entitled to a share of the labors in the house of mother literature, they all endeavor to multiply the motherly heirloom. The publisher produces, the bookseller disseminates, the antiquarian preserves.

Immense is the producing power of the publisher, irresistibly and unceasingly tumble the waters of the new publications toward the bookseller. Thousands of new books float yearly past him and pray: "Notice me, take me, sell me!" But, alas! he hardly finds time to notice one-third of this flood—much less is he enabled to care for the previous year's productions. But the previous year's output, that of the year before, and even the books of past years will not mold; they are eager to live and be useful—they then come within the domain of the antiquarian.

He stands, like the bookseller, daily before the immense flood of the product, and he must be even more critical than his bookselling brother, since he does not take his goods, like the former, without risk "on sale," but buys them for cash. He pays his good money for them, and therefore is desirous of purchasing only good books. He examines them carefully, sifts the chaff from the wheat; he weighs them and leaves his hands off of those books found wanting. And how peculiarly he exercises his judgment. The gilded work, the ornament of the Christmas table is regarded by him with little consideration, the fashionable novel as well as the much advertised book he passes by with disdain; but he eagerly seizes the modest, scientific monograph, and the very book which the publisher has unwillingly printed and the bookseller has hardly noticed he helps to an enduring life. As a judge he is stern but righteous. Glitter and baubles do not dazzle him. With severity he cross-examines the "pick-up" about its nationality, its wherefore, how and whence, and cares not for its exterior or number of pages. He gauges its price according to author, execution and demand of the book. From his judgment there is no appeal. What he lets live endures, what he condemns to death is lost waste paper. In this manner he decides as the highest tribunal and last appeal on the worthiness or unworthiness of the books, their enduring life or rapid disappearance. The recognition, identification and preservation of the good, these are the ideal ends of the scientific antiquarian.

The antiquarian receives his goods from the hands of the public and the publisher, either directly or by means of public auction. Now and then he replenishes his stock from other antiquarians. The latter manner of purchase, however, forms an insignificant part of his trade.

The trade between the antiquarian and the publisher is indeed a lively one, since in the disposal of older stock the assistance of the antiquarian is indispensable. The publisher turns to him whenever he reduces the price of his publications and requests him to place those books in his catalogues, to him he turns whenever he contemplates the sale of remainders. There is hardly an antiquarian who has not several of these remainders in stock; some make a specialty of it. They are by no means small or unimportant works but mainly large and expensive ones, the remainders of which go to the antiquarian, and it often happens that books which have rested for years undisturbed on the shelves of the publisher become in the hands of an enterprising and hustling antiquarian good investments, and sometimes he sells them out entirely. The very extensive catalogues of remainders of some dealers (principally of Frankfort on M.) show a fine perception for the valuable and a healthy appreciation of the saleable For such a business enterprise a not uncommon courage is essential, a sharp tact—and a handsome pile of money.

[*This paper, found recently among Mr. Growoll's personal effects, has, we believe, never before been printed. The subject is one after Mr. Growoll's own heart; and the paper, though written evidently a decade and a half ago, is almost as fresh and pertinent today as it was then. It is printed here as Mr. Growoll left it.—ED. P.W.]

More frequently than from the publisher the antiquarian buys his books in small lots or large collections from the public. He collects and replenishes his stock mostly in this manner. The larger the chance for buying the more his business prospers. The buying, however, is far more difficult than the selling. The purchase of good books is therefore the main solicitude of the antiquarian. In the tracing of a favorable purchase he may show his smartness, in a professional appraisement he may display his knowledge, and in a favorable settlement show his business tact. The appraisement is a difficult and responsible task which can only be accomplished by experienced men. The appraisement of written or printed lists is comparatively easy since the many tools at the antiquarian's disposal give him ample assistance. More difficult is the appraisement of a larger library. Without the trade tools the antiquarian is mainly dependent on his memory, his knowledge and his instinct. The appraisement of a larger collection of books is not only a difficult business but likewise one that takes up much time, provided it be done with care. And how often is this wearisome work made in vain. The growing competition makes this work still more arduous. There is, principally in the purchase of larger collections, less a fight for the books than for the name. The ambition to place upon the market the library of a celebrity prompts the antiquarian quite often to incur considerable pecuniary sacrifices. Catalogues which bear upon their titles the well sounding name of a celebrated scholar or collector might incidentally bear the motto: "Much honor and little profit." The greater the honor, the less generally is the profit. Upon general principle it would be well for the antiquarian to have continually before his mind's eye the beautiful maxim: "Don't lose your temper, my boy." Principally, however, he needs this motto when he has before him the settlement of a larger business affair. This is for him the time of the most distressing unpleasantness, opposite which he stands absolutely powerless. To the respectable antiquarian it is most desirable to treat with such people who have a knowledge of what they have to sell. With those he arrives at a settlement without much trouble. Woe to him, however, if ignorance combined with distrust meet the buying antiquarian. Untold perplexities are his lot if he be not smart enough for a timely retreat.

Finally, if he has, after trouble, sacrifices and vexations, brought to a close the longed-for settlement, the purchased library is put in order and the sifting process begins. Waste paper or useful—that is the question now. But this is a question of importance and one not so easily to be decided, since it is not all waste paper which the casual observer is disposed to regard as such. As every individual has at least one amiable trait of character, one physical or mental distinction, so also has a book which appears to come within the range of waste paper on account of age or subject, at least one redeeming feature and is interesting and saleable—be it to wise men or fools—since one has to deal with both. The ways of collectors are so strange, their passions and dispositions are so singular, the fashion of collecting books so changeable, jumps are so frequent from the sublime to the ridiculous and from the ridiculous to the sublime, that one must be prepared for the future to supply the seemingly most impossible demands of collectors. Whenever the storage space permits it is therefore advisable not to be too eager to throw away and whenever one is not absolutely sure of the book being useless to decide upon the "let live." With some books an uncertainty seems hardly possible, their uselessness being so apparent—the judgment is severe—death and degradation. Everything that distinguishes and adorns the offender is torn from him. The parchment of the binding is skinned, portraits and plates ripped out, even the "ex libris" is sponged from the cover, and so dismembered tumbles the book to his fellow-sufferers in the waste paper corner. Float away, then thou honest medicus of 1800, float away thou antiquated chemist, physicist, geographer, and take along these legal "meditations" and this "German history;" float away thrice damned "Zumpt," float away; but no, not thou, thou facetious ditty sung by a loose rake, I shall save thee, thou shalt survive thy learned contemporaries, who despised thee so much, since science becomes antiquated but poetry remains young forever.

After having gone through the sifting process the cataloguing of the stock begins. Each title is inscribed upon a card, the book receives a number which is noted down upon the said card, and then wanders into the stock. The manner of taking down the title is everywhere done differently. In some houses the title is copied with bibliographic fidelity, others aim at the utmost brevity. Both these systems have their faults. Too much abbreviated titles are difficult to understand and make the reading of the catalogue disagreeable; too long titles are tiresome. The correct method lies between these two, the distinctness must not suffer by its brevity, the important features must be retained, the ornamental verbiage cut out. If the title be altogether too verbose and extended one must not be too punctilious even to the extent of changing of words. The foregoing does not apply to every book, however. If a title be found in books of ancient date (prints of the fifteenth century are mostly without title) it ought to be copied with fidelity, the original and often absurd verbiage is to be retained, the separate lines are to be divided by dashes, and abbreviations which are necessary must be designated by periods (since our forefathers were wont to unburden their whole hearts on the title-page); yea, evident errata the antiquarian preserves in these prints with scrupulous exactness. But in such cases he unloads his own responsibility

(by a sic!) upon the compositor who has rested in the Lord for centuries.

If there be neither praise nor blame as to the condition of the book, the size and binding ends its description. If found damaged, such as being water stained or musty, pierced by worms or knawed by mice, these defects or similar horrors are announced by a pitiful "we are sorry." Some antiquarians possess the faculty of describing such ravages in the least offensive manner. Too much of this method may easily bring a house into disrepute. Some antiquarians insist, for instance, that the designation "musty like all copies" indicates too much boldness and misses its purpose. Excellences in his books the antiquarian will wisely not conceal. He calls it "a fine copy," or "one of uncommonly fine preservation." His pen may even takes a poetic flight if he be permitted to announce the fine appearance of a great rarity. The paper is accordingly as white as snow and as heavy as a board, the binding is executed by the hand of an artist, the margin is of untold width, the cuts of uncommonly fine impression, the copy as fresh "as if it had just left the press." In mentioning some insignificant and minute deficiencies (such as worm-eaten through the white margin of two pages) the description receives the appearance of painstaking truth, and with the assurance that such a copy could hardly be procured again the brazen tirade of laudation comes to a conclusion.

Beside the description in reference to the preservation of the book there are often necessary some remarks on its greater or less rarity. By the addition of "out of print and much wanted" the high price is sufficiently justified. Some of these notices of rarity read like romances. "As is well known" a conflagration or a flood or an earthquake has destroyed the whole edition of a costly work, and only this one copy—which is in the possession of the antiquarian—has been preserved by a happy accident. Every doubt has been dispelled by the wording "as is well known." Who likes to be taken for an ignoramus—even to himself?

The description of the state of preservation and the mentioning of exterior conditions, however, are not sufficient in many cases. Attention must be called to its great value and justified by short extracts of its contents, though such observations must not degenerate into vaingloriousness and obtrusion. No sensible antiquarian will lose a word upon a well-known and valuable book. There are, however, a large number of old and unknown books, whose modest, unpromising titles do not foreshadow their rich contents, such as "Contributions to . . ." "Essays on . . ." Here it is the province of the antiquarian to call attention by an appropriate note. The short time at his disposal does not permit a thorough reading of the book, but the professional antiquarian must perceive intuitively its value by merely handling it. The fine scent belongs to the profession. There is essential, in him, however, a good education and a mastery of the science in question to be able to distinguish the important from the unimportant. A conscientious elucidation of its contents takes up much time, it is true, but the thinking antiquarian gladly makes this sacrifice, since he knows that hereby he fulfills the ideal purpose of his life and that his greatest usefulness lies in this direction; that also by his searching activity, by his intelligent and discriminating description of the unknown he lifts himself from the merchant to a servant of science, yea, he often elevates himself to her pathfinder and guide.

The finishing touch of the catalogue-making consists in determining the price. With recent publications the list price forms a starting point, the book being out of print increases its value, its reduction in price lessens it. In determining the price of a book the antiquarian in the majority of cases relies upon his experience. If he be doubtful about the valuation, he resorts to the catalogues of other houses. In Germany there are specialists in antiquarian lore whose valuations are considered as final. According to their prices dealers gauge theirs. This reciprocity has been the creature of necessity, which everybody recognizes and nobody thinks its adoption wrong, since that which one house borrows from another he returns in his own specialty. The reciprocity of use neutralizes the damage. One thing, however, the house may regret, namely, that one must not, after getting good counsel, pay with ingratitude by pricing the book lower and triumphantly referring to it in a footnote. "W. in X. is 2 marks dearer than I; look, what a cheap man I am!" The larger houses have given up this practice long ago (good enough for the trade with second-hand trousers) or employ it only in rare and exceptional cases or where it is justifiable.

The best advice in regard to description and price of books the antiquarian finds in his reference library. In larger houses this library almost fills a whole wall and represents a considerable value. There they stand in long rows, the admirable monuments of human knowledge and human perseverance. In the front rank stands Panzer's gigantic work on the earliest prints, next to him are joined the worthy labors of Hain, Campbell, Braun, Zapf, etc., on the same subject. Jocher's great lexicon of men of letters can hardly be dispensed with on account of its good bibliography. George's book lexicon, which by the way is much too little used, gives good information on the literature of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Our prolific nineteenth century is represented by the voluminous Kayser. For German literature we may name among the many authorities the works of Panzer, Weller, Meltzaher, Wackernagel and Goedeke's excellent and recently completed treatise on the history of German poetry. In French literature we may mention Brunet, Barbier, Cohn, and the exhaustive "Catalogue general de la librairie français" of our countryman, Otto Lorenz. In English literature Lowndes, in Spanish literature Salva and Gallardo, in Italian literature Haym, in Slavic literature Bartkowski, Janocki, Hanslick, Napierski, etc. The Americana are described by Harrisse, on Oriental and classical literature Zenker, Furst, Jolowinz, Engelmann's Bibliotheca Scriptorum philologica, etc. For literature of art Weigel's art catalogue, Vinet's bibliography, and Nagel's artist's lexicon and monogrammists are important. For the description of natural sciences the bibliographic works of Engelmann and Carus, Hagen, Grebd, Pritzel, Jackson, Lalunde, Morgan, etc., are of good service. Who counts the peoples and calls their names! I could fill pages with mere titles, since what domain of literature, be it ever so remote, has not already its bibliography? We possess a bibliotheca magica and an elaborate and exhaustive Bibliotheca Germanicorum Erdica (by H. Nay-Haym). Whoever desires to inform himself of the extraordinary plethora in the domain of bibliography may turn to Petzoldt's Bibliotheca Bibliographica, a bibliography of bibliographies of 939 pages octavo.

We also earnestly recommend to the antiquarian and his assistants to always have handy Elbert's "Bibliographic Lexicon," Graesse's "Tresor," and Brunet's "Manuel." Each of these does not embrace a special field of literature but has attempted the gigantic labor of describing and cataloging all valuable books of every language and of all peoples. Among these the highest rank is held by Brunet's "Manuel du libraire et de l'amateur des livres." This work, which is not surpassed by any of its kind, is the gospel of the antiquarian. The last edition was published about a quarter of a century ago, and although its prices have become entirely antiquated, its authority has been undisputed to the present day. The description is lucid and the collation conscientiously performed. In brief words the why, wherefore, and the how of the valuation is given; thorough knowledge and a finely developed taste are associated in this work with painful conscientiousness and a practical knowledge gained by many years' labor. The work of Brunet is by no means the result of a diligent search of so and so many libraries or the extracts of so and so many antiquarian or auction catalogues, but on the contrary is mostly the result of practical experience. Brunet had visited for years the greater auctions and there had occasion not only to see the books but also to observe the ups and downs of prices, to determine their rarity or their frequent occurrence and to learn to distinguish the ephemeral works from those of enduring value. This practical experience gives to his judgment that assurance and sharpness which to-day are still admired and gratefully utilized by both amateurs and dealers. It will be extremely difficult for the publishing house to find an equally capable editor for a new edition. The two supplements which were published in 1870–1880 do not compare favorably with the main work. To my colleagues of the booktrade—for which mainly I write—I would particularly call attention to the splendidly arranged index of subject matter (table methodique) of this work. It embraces 31,872 important works in all departments of literature and in all languages, and therefore forms a compendium of the literature of the world, arranged in careful and systematic order. Here one finds all important works on any subject under its subject-head comprehensively arranged. To the bookseller who is frequently requested to give information or make special lists on certain branches of literature this "table methodique" will be of the greatest usefulness.

However, one must not think that the antiquarian finds the prices of the books made to order, and he has only to copy them. Life is not made so easy for him. Most of those reference manuals contain no prices whatever, they are only useful in determining the issue and bibliography of books. The prices given by Ebert, Graesse and Brunet have to-day only a historical value and virtually give no aid in determining the price, but one finds in these and other hand-books hints on the rarity, value and other information which facilitate the fixing of prices. But in spite of this great apparatus no antiquarian has reached as yet the goal of infallibility. Everybody makes mistakes and even the experience of many years cannot prevent that books are either priced too high, or—what is much worse and not so easily rectified—placed too low. Like spiders upon the flies the knowing antiquarians swoop down upon this too cheaply-priced book and try to purchase it. A flood of orders opens the eyes of the antiquarian who made the mistake when, alas! it is too late to correct the same; he preceives that he has been made wise again by experience, and, to add insult to injury, he has the jibing of his colleagues gratis, and in "errare est humanum" he finds but meager consolation.

When the entering and pricing of the book has been accomplished, then begins the collating of the catalogue. At first the manner of the arrangement has to be deliberately considered. The cheapest and most expedient way is the simple alphabetical arrangement, and in smaller lists this cataloguing is preferable. If the material, however, is more ample and the subjects suitable, it is well to adopt the strictly scientific classification. This, however, costs much time and trouble. Those subjects lying far away from general reading, as Orientalia, Slavonica, etc., are not so easily brought into a system, and one must necessarily look up references to avoid mistakes. The reader will readily pardon trifling errors, but he who—as has actually happened—brought "Aristophanes' The Frogs," under Zoology, or placed "Historia Diplomatica Friderici II." by Huillard-Breholles under the heading of Frederick II. of Prussia, becomes the laughing stock of the trade or may even be immortalized in the Kladderadatsch. Catalogues arranged according to subject matter are the most convenient ones to the reader; he finds that which interests him all in one place, and this convenient arrangement often induces him to give an order which otherwise he would not have made, if out of several thousand numbers he had to root out those which were suitable for his purpose. But aside from this, a systematically arranged list ceases to be a mere mercantile means of trade and is elevated to the rank of a bibliographic manual. The scholar regards it as such and gives it a lasting place in his library. Truly scientifically classified catalogues are most worthy of the German antiquarian book-trade.

Whoever takes pride in his catalogues is not apt to neglect their exterior and will be careful to use good paper and clean, faultless type. All the better German catalogues have a dignified exterior. Now and then one meets even an artistically executed catalogue title-page. An Augsberg firm, for instance, uses the beautiful Cranach borders as a title ornamentation. The introduction of all kinds of emblems is chosen and seen quite frequently. The style of the old printers lies nearest to the antiquarian, and we therefore often find represented the somewhat modified coat-of-arms of Fust and Schöffer, the anchor of Aldus, etc., etc. Other houses hold to allegories. On the racy catalogues of a south German firm we find printed for years an overflowing pot, tumbled upside down, whose contents we shall not too closely examine. A house which deals especially in jurisprudence adapts a partly dressed Justicia, clappering lustily with sword and scales. On the catalogue-title of a prominent Berlin firm a naked Fortuna takes an airing, her horn of plenty turned economically upward and the sword in her right hand signifies that she is used now and then to make a "cut." Other catalogues are ornamented with portraits of Gutenberg, Faust and Schöffer, Erasmus of Rotterdam, and others; and on the catalogue-title of a larger Leipzig firm we look upon the grim face of Siegismund Feierabend, who seems to be extremely ill-humored.

Some antiquarians have their own list of customers, others have printed lists from which they take names to mail their catalogues. A large part of these go to booksellers, who mostly neglect to use them to advantage. It is to be regretted, however, that the trade show so little interest in such a splendid means of pushing their business and attain such trifling results. The large discount which must at present be given with new books should make the antiquarian catalogues really more profitable than the selling of new books. It is to be hoped that this treatise, which is mainly written for the gentlemen of the book-trade, may induce them to show a more lively interest in the labors of their colleagues of the antiquarian trade and prevent their catalogues from being thrown into the waste basket.

The catalogues have flown to all quarters of the globe, all known collectors have been supplied with them. Now begins the time of harvest. Postal-cards, letters and telegrams bring orders to the antiquarian. In packages and parcels he sends them away. With mingled feelings he sees them depart. To some he bids farewell with an easy heart, but from some the parting is painful in the extreme. A great rarity has grown into his heart. How glad he was to possess it—now it is taken away from him—there will be an adieu never to meet again. The dealer and the connoisseur here battle a fierce contest, but the gold of the buyer blinks too seductively—farewell.

The shipping of books brings commotion and excitement into the formerly tranquil bookshop, but when the tide of orders has subsided and the ordinary quietness of business routine has returned, then the antiquarian finds leisure to start the collation of a new catalogue. He is ordinarily not interrupted by too lively dropping-in of customers, but he by no means is entirely unhindered in his labors. Although he may have little transient trade, he has a large number of customers who have requested him to fill voids in their libraries. Their wants lie before him—printed or written lists of desiderata, and they must be filled with dispatch and precision. This costs time and research. A greater amount of time and research, however, requires the study of daily incoming lists of other houses. To read them all is an impossibility—it would take up all his available time. But he must attentively peruse all those catalogues having specialties of his own, order bargains, notice the location of certain books and follow their price-fluctuations. The auction catalogues must also be considered. No less time must be given to the lists of books wanted in the "Börsenblatt." The main activity of the scientific antiquarian, however, consists in the buying and cataloguing of his stock.

From what has been said here, it may be inferred that a great distinction exists between the trade in new books and the antiquarians. Indeed, these branches apparently have no connection, although closely related to each other. The bookseller sells books on commission, he receives and gives long credits. His mode of keeping books is complicated and wearisome. Otherwise it is with the antiquarian. His stock is his absolute property, he buys for cash and only sells for cash. The difficult and tedious labor of returning unsold stock he hardly knows, the Easter mass has no terrors for him. His goddess is "occasio," the opportunity. If she frowns on him he is idle in the best of seasons, if she smiles he has his hands full even in the dog days. And how radically different is the internal condition of his business to that of the bookseller's. His is a comfortable business with no risks; he scrupulously avoids calling his books "merchandise," he is likely to keep himself aloof of the traders and flatters himself to be a go-between—like the druggist—between the merchant and the scholar! He speculates not, or very little, his risk being trifling. The antiquarian, on the other hand, is and must be a speculator. There are speculations in books as well as in stocks. Each purchase is a speculation, so to say. Absolute certainty is rarely met. In purchasing books with little to lose there is frequently little to gain. The buying of larger collections is always a leap into vacuity. Whether one may land below with whole limbs only the future will disclose. Thousands of unforeseen accidents may diminish or entirely destroy the profits of the antiquarian. Unfortunate contingencies may prevent him from realizing on the purchase, defects may diminish the price of the most valuable books, his catalogues may meet with indifference or may be neutralized by previously published catalogues of rival firms. But on the other hand a larger profit may be reaped if luck be with him. Thousands of incalculable contingencies may increase his profits beyond expectation. An unexpected find, quick realization of the purchase and a good success of the catalogue may build up a business, which in its incipiency had little promise, to vast proportions.

The main difference, however, between the bookseller and the antiquarian consists in the international character of the latter. The bookseller roots in his native town, his business depends upon his fellow-citizens, the streets in which he dwells, the proximity of an institution, even a higher institute for girls is of some importance to him and is mentioned as a fortunate incident in his opening advertisement. For the antiquarian, on the other hand, the town in which he is located—as far as sales are concerned—is of little importance. His customers are to be found in the whole bookbuying world. In place of the transient traffic he has the catalogue business. His customers are everywhere. To-day he turns with his lists to the Slavonians, to-morrow to the Roumanians; at other times he prints his catalogues for the special edification of the Americans, etc. This international character of his trade induces him now and then to print his catalogue in another language than his own. Not only for the sale but also for the purchase of books, the whole world is open to him. He replenishes his stock from auction sales in London, Florence, Paris, Amsterdam, etc., as well as from Leipzig or Berlin. He buys foreign collections as well as those of home. He must know the literature of foreign countries and follow its progress with as much assiduity as his own.

As the bookseller in his activity sometimes does not know whether he stands on his head or on his feet, so much more is the antiquarian in danger of becoming entangled and losing his bearings; he who shall and must dominate the whole world of literature from its earliest times till the present days; he who should be as well acquainted with the prints of Mentetno and Koburger as with the latest publications of the home and foreign book market. The antiquarian cannot exclusively cater to the ancient, he must follow with equal attention the new, like the bookseller, since the new of yesterday may be old to-day, and may come into his hands. He must know that it exists, that he may expect it, and must know its value. He also follows it up because it influences the old. The newly published book often destroys the need and wants of one already existing and depresses its value. A new edition neutralizes the book being formerly out-of-print and transforms a goodly antiquarian profit into a small one. The antiquarian must take notice of all these new comers, these transitions and metamorphoses, in order not to suffer loss. But how is it possible that a man, however gifted he may be, keep afloat in this maelstrom without end without becoming exhausted? Nobody can. Some attempt, like bold Alexander, for whom Macedonia was too small, to travel everywhere as conqueror, but soon they return with torn garments and shattered health. Whoever tries to do too much will accomplish nothing. The maxim not to divide his forces should guide every thinking antiquarian. He should feel that it is impossible to embrace the whole; he should know that he is only able to accomplish something if he centre all his efforts into a single branch. He becomes a specialist. We have specialists in natural sciences, medicine, theology, jurisprudence, history, classic and modern literature, art, music, etc., etc.

Often this specialty is influenced by accident or locality or the chance of buying, often the antiquarian is governed by his character, inclination and education in the choice of his specialty. It is curious to observe how the continuous occupation of a single specialty influences men in general and the antiquarian in particular, since the one with a leaning to natural sciences often possesses a collection of natural objects. In his leisure hours he pins butterflies, if he does not prefer to press flowers or collect minerals. The specialist in law books is frequently somewhat of a jurist consult, while the philologist is strongly impregnated with classicism, indulges in Latin sentences and sometimes writes Latin introductions to his catalogues in which he applies to his reader the flattering "doctissime vir."

If the antiquarian be wisely disposed he may accomplish really great things. He may indeed attain to that stage where he completely masters his specialty and knows all important facts pertaining thereto, not only the important books but also the small and insignificant ones, since the interest of our specialists is not only confined to the published books but also to the stray papers in scientific periodicals which find a place in the catalogues. These catalogues offer almost complete lists of the respective specialties. They are less antiquarian catalogues than bibliographic manuals on the collective literature of the specialty carried on to the present time. It is impossible, however, for the antiquarian to have every book in stock at second-hand, but as he desires to present in his list a complete portrayal of the existing literature, he is compelled to list a large number of books at retail prices. In this manner he adds in time to the antiquarian specialty a special list of new books. But his trade is still further liable to extension. His intimate intercourse with scholars in his specialty will lead him irresistibly to become a publisher. At first he begins timidly with the sale of scientific monographs on the basis of a commission, then he becomes bolder, until finally he adds to the antiquarian business and trade in new books the publications of his specialty. Assuredly nobody is more capable of being a publisher than the antiquarian in specialties. He knows its limits and its wants, and also its deficiencies and improvements. He knows almost all the native and foreign scholars in this domain, he knows them even from the time they have entered college. He is acquainted with their books and stray monographs; in consequence of his business experience he knows the importance of every scholar and also the demand for each of their books, at the same time controlling their sales. His extensive personal acquaintance with all savants in his specialty facilitates his trade and his catalogues give him cheap and lasting opportunities for advertising his publications. He can absolutely dispense with the bookseller and can price his books lower by saving the commission to the retailer. Flourishing publishing houses, like T. O. Weigel, have evolved from the antiquarian book trade. This was not considered by the gifted and clever defensor of "pure publications" when he lately spoke disdainfully of the "occasional publications." The antiquarian specialist will lay his ax on the proud tree of "pure publications," and he will "down" it. He will supersede "pure publications," since he can better estimate their capacity for selling and controlling their sale. In the transition of our bookselling trade the scientific antiquarian as above pictured will play an important role. The future belongs to him.

And what demands does the scientific antiquarian booktrade make of its disciples? It demands much. In the first place a good general education and a thorough knowledge of languages. The humanistic preparation given in our gymnasiums is most serviceable to the antiquarian. Without the knowledge of Latin and Greek he cannot well get along; he is daily encountered by it in whatever branch of literature he may labor. The knowledge of these languages facilitates the acquirement of modern ones. Of these French and English are most indispensable. Both languages he must be able to write and to converse in, also to describe books. Even a superficial knowledge of other languages will be useful to him. The more foreign idioms he knows something about the better for him; he may use them all, from the holy language of the Bible to the dialect of the strolling gypsies. His knowledge of the whole world literature, political as well as historical, must be without a flaw. His knowledge of art must not be neglected and he must always apply himself to the enriching of it, since in the antiquarian booktrade the internally important as well as the externally beautiful must be considered and correctly expressed in its valuation. It is not this acquirable knowledge alone but also the innate faculties which make up the sum and substance of the born antiquarian. The most prominent and indispensable of these natural gifts is a retentive memory. If the receptacles of his memory are roomy then the antiquarian may consider himself happy, since what all has he not to stow away. Thousands of book titles with their number of volumes, years and prices must find their place here, and his memory must keep and retain them, often without using them, since many which he must know he never had occasion to see. Every minute he has to resort to the storehouse of his memory, and the more complete he finds it the quicker, surer and better he is able to work. Weakness of memory and incapacity to work are synonymous in the antiquarian. But a memory, be it ever so good, will retain only a small particle of the necessary knowledge, for the books which he has never seen, of which he has never heard and about which he has never read, the antiquarian needs gifts which are almost indefinable—an instinct which tells him "this is something!" a probocis that smells the valuable, an eye which sees where hundreds see nothing. This faculty cannot be taught and cannot be acquired by experience—it must be innate.

Equally valuable for the antiquarian is the mercantile courage. We have before elaborated upon the prominent part which speculation plays in the antiquarian booktrade, how rarely one is sure of profit, and how every larger purchase is a jump into vacuity. Whoever is afraid of this jump, whoever is too timid and clings to the absolutely sure, will never suffer great losses—but he must also renounce great gains. A daring courage coupled with determination but also drawing into his calculations "Fortes, fortuna adjuvat," is inborn with the good antiquarian just as well as the instinctive perception of the valuable.

But courage is not only a qualification in buying but also in asking prices. It is bold to ask prices which surpass those customary ones, to keep them up with energy and persistency and to bulldoze the public into paying them. Whoever can accomplish this—and there is one and only one who is able to accomplish this—he may say of himself that he reigns supreme over the book lovers. His dictum stamps insignificants into valuables, he plays the sovereign with the notions of collectors and leads them to other domains at his own sweet will. They modify their own judgment and taste unconsciously according to his will and pay willingly the highest prices on his authority—the tyrannos in the realm of bibliophiles.

And what does the antiquarian booktrade offer to its disciples aside from its pecuniary profit? How does it compensate their labor and love? Is it a willing beauty which submits to the first lover after a short struggle? Far from it. Now and then she lifts her veil, now and then she vouchsafes a smile, but rarely more. She never gives herself wholly—not even to the best. None of her adorers can solve the riddles of her mood nor uncover her secrets. The truest lover is often misled and believes himself discarded since the antiquarian can never say of himself, "Now you are at an end, you know what one must know." Every hour brings him new and unknown books, each catalogue recalls to him the consciousness of how infinitely wide are still the voids of his knowledge. And he is aroused and tries to fill these voids; he swoops down upon every catalogue, he studies the bibliographic manuals, but however assiduously he may labor the more he sees the voids extend instead of diminish. All his labors are in vain, every day men and books call to him mockingly, "And still thou knowest it not!" His vigor is paralyzed—the realm is infinite. In this never-to-be-done lies a certain tragicness.

The antiquarian booktrade is like the "Jungfrau" in the Alps. Nobody has ever reached both apexes, and nobody will ever reach them. Whoever aims at this solely and advances hastily experiences only disappointment and suffering, but whoever contents himself with the unchangeable climbs up to the reachable heights, and instead of having constant anxiety to reach the cloudy apex takes in the splendid view, to him then is disclosed the magnificent panorama. Inasmuch as the Swiss mountains, which we cited for the sake of analogy, grant to the voyager the most precious views, so does the antiquarian booktrade grant to its thinking disciples a wonderful and true retrospect into the past. There are no better witnesses for the past than books. They illustrate best their epochs, and nothing is more eloquent than their language on paper. And these true witnesses of the past the antiquarian has constantly about him, they are his trusty guides—the walks of literature and history.

With humble reverence he contemplates the earliest books, with admiration he perceives their beautiful print, their finely-executed initials, their artistically tooled binding and the well chiseled backs and clasps. At first they speak in cold Latin, but soon they talk in the sweet tones of the mother tongue. The great artists meet us. Wohlgemuth brings his "Scheldelsche Chronik" ornamented with woodcuts; Schaeuffelein his "Tenerdank," and Durer and Bergmaier unroll in the triumphal train and memorial arch of Emperor Maximilian a wonderful and color-brilliant picture of the mediaeval age going to war. Hans Holbein represents in numerous books the mirthful humor of his children and peasants and the sombre thoughts of his death-dance. Lucas Cranach is the artist of the Reformation; the controversial literature of that period bears his and his pupils' illustrations and initials. Luther proclaims his teachings to the country, Huteen prints his "complaint and admonition," and Hans Sachs sings his songs. From the writings of the anti-Baptists shrieks human insanity, and in the peasants' war the enchained people call for vengeance. In thousands of songs the people laugh and cry, love and hate, pray and jibe, and in thousands of proverbs collected by Agricola, Frank and Zinegrep, it brings forth its simple truths. Numerous "new gazettes" proclaim festive entrances and marriages, war and pestilences, earthquakes, comets and tempestuous storms, conflagrations and murderous deeds; they accompany the unhappy Wilhelm von Grumbach to execution and curse the terrible ban of the times—the Turk. The sagas of Akasver and Faust, the frolics of Eulenspiegel and Reinecke, long already in the mouths of the people are now put in print and multiplied. Bebel writes his "facetia," Seb. Brandt his "Ship of Fools," Kirchheim his "Wedunmort," Murner the "Ulenspiegel," Pauli his "Schimpf und Ernst," and Fischart his "Geschichtsklitterung." One of the largest undertakings in publishing of all times, "The voyages of de Bry," in conjunction with that of Hulsius, tells the astonished multitude of the newly-discovered wonderland America.

The thirty years' war breaks out. A great mercantile and money crisis punctuates its beginning. Money is scarce and the scanty stock is forged. The hatred of the people shows itself against the usurers and money changers in many pamphlets. The fugitive papers accompany all phases of the great war; the outcry is against the "Spanish practices," against Tilly and Wallenstein; they bewail the fall of Madgeburg, exalt Gustav Adolf and mourn at his bier. But how abominable they appear in comparison with their ornament-bordered brethern of the sixteenth century. The utter misery of the times which is moaning from their papers is shown in their plain and poor exterior. Khevenhiller's "Conterfet Kupfersticke" represents to us the portraits of the heroes of these sombre days, and Hulle's "Pacificatories orbis christiani" the facial expressions of the pacificators of Osnabruck. The commotion of war, however, did not annihilate the muses. The "Fruitbringing Society" comes forward. Opitz, A. Gryphnis, Flemming, Logan, and Hoffmanswaldan, are the principal poets; Moscherosch, Schupp and Abraham á Santa Clara, the satirists of this epoch. Grimmelshause and Hans von Schweinichen paint in coarse but true colors the customs of their time, while the humor of the people reappears in the luxuriously flourishing farce literature and lets itself loose in "Leyer Matz," "Sackpfeiffer," "Scheergerger," etc. The seventeenth century, like the sixteenth, has also its literary cobbler—Jacob Bohme—and his teachings find in Onirinus Kuhlmann, the poet of the "Cowpsalter," an enthusiastic apostle and martyr. Mathias Merian produces in his topographies a national work of magnificence, less charming by its beauty than homely by its fidelity.

But the national sentiment has suffered. At the beginning of the eighteenth century we see the French predominance demoralizing the production of national poetry, and it merely finds its literary expression in the sombre comical scribblings of Troems, the "Teutsch-Franzos," who wrote in an abominable French-German jargon. Yet the spark of nationality was not entirely extinct. It glimmered still and it flared up when Polish arrogance maltreated the Germans in Eastern Prussia, and the deeds of Frederick the Great enthused the masses. An immense amount of war news, thanksgivings, odes of praise and lampoons, letters and dramatic dialogues show what an interest the whole nation took in this hero. The French Revolution found a weak echo in Elvgins Schnerder and von Rebmann. The great mass of educated Germans were not affected by it, however. It was a weak, sentimental generation whose types were engraved by Chodowicski in the numerous almanacs of those days. "Werther" filled the whole of Germany and called forth a vast literature which permeated everybody, from the wise critic, Nicolai, to the royal subaltern of friar Riebe. Napoleon's oppression forced arms upon this lachrymose generation. The "Almanach de Gotha" of 1808 is a literary witness of his arbitrary power. But the war of literature produced comparatively scanty results in pamphlet literature—though it formerly always accompanied great events in Germany—excepting perhaps those of Gentz, Eichhorn, and some others. Everybody was under arms and there was no time for writing.

The eighteenth century preeminently belongs to poetry, the nineteenth to science. The brothers Grimm sift the plenitude of German etymology, Pertz collects the earliest monuments of German history—in all dominions a restless endeavor for progress. The new is produced, the old revivified; and fed by a thousand sources the stream of German influence floats along powerfully, and continually grows. But the political life is torpid. The German troubles are disunited and everywhere the ruler and the ruled are placed in bitter antagonism. In this calamity divine providence sends Bismarck, the savior and unitor. Already for a quarter of a century this extraordinary man has influenced the whole German nation in such a prodigious manner. But even the Luther literature appears jejune and trifling compared with the immensity of the Bismarck literature. Newspaper articles and pamphlets add to it every day. Numerous are his friends and also his enemies. In infinite numbers rebound the written arrows from his brow, for they cannot pierce the laurels which the whole nation in the hour of enthusiasm has wound around it.

A SYSTEM FOR KEEPING TRACK OF SPECIAL ORDERS.

A RECENT issue of System summarizes the method adopted by a well-known Ohio bookstore to take care automatically of special book orders. Each salesman is provided with a number of cards similar to that shown in the form on this page. Whenever he takes an order, he writes the necessary information regarding the sale on one of these cards, including the name of the author, the title, publisher, purchaser, the date, and his own sales number. Towards the end of the day a stenographer from the purchasing department collects these cards and places orders for all the books at one time.

The cards then go to a clerk who files them alphabetically, according to title. All invoices are turned over to her as they are received. By referring to the card index, she knows whether the invoice is for a special order or a stock order. In case it is the former, she writes on the bottom of the invoice the number of the salesman who made the requisition for the book.

When the book comes in, the receiving clerk writes this number on a slip of paper and inserts it in the book; it is then easy for the salesmen to select their own books. They remove the proper cards from the file and prepare the books for delivery or notify the purchasers to call.

THE H. W. WILSON CO. MOVES EAST.

THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY, the well-known bibliographical publishers, who have for many years carried on their business in Minneapolis, announce an important move. They recently disposed of their retail book and stationery business to The Northwestern School Supply Company. This leaves the company free to devote itself exclusively to the compiling and publishing of book trade and library bibliographical tools and to other publications in their special field. For a number of years a move to New York City or its vicinity has been under consideration, and the disposal of the retail business and the leasing of their building in Minneapolis makes it possible to make this change at this time.

They have just leased a large fireproof building at No. 39 Mamaroneck Ave., White Plains, N. Y., and expect to occupy the building about November 1st. They hope to be able to issue their publications with much greater efficiency when in close touch with the center of the publishing business of the country.

COMMUNICATIONS.

THE FREIGHT RATE ON BOOKS.

Chicago, August 13, 1913.

Editor The Publishers Weekly:

I am much interested in your editorial and Mr. Ford's letter regarding freight rate on books in your issue of August 9th. This is a matter that should have united consideration, and perhaps sufficient protest can be made to assure some action.

There is, however, another angle to the question, and that is, the rate on old books is just the same as the rate on new stock. Every year great quantities of old books are shipped to publishers, who take them up in exchange, or to jobbers, on which first-class freight is paid, although much of the stock is absolutely worthless, except as paper stock, which is worth less than the freight. I am surprised that the school book publishers have not done something in this matter, as they have most of the freight to pay, but we have enough of it to pay to make it a serious matter.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

"THE REVOLT OF DEMOCRACY," by Dr. Alfred Russel Wallace is on the Cassell list.

FUNK & WAGNALLS will issue this month a new edition of the New Standard Dictionary.

MISS L. M. MONTGOMERY'S new story, "The Golden Roak," has just been published by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co.

GEORGE BARR MCCUTCHEON'S latest novel, "A Fool and His Money," is to be published September 13th, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

THE authorized translation of Strindberg's novel, "By the Open Sea," is announced for publication this month by B. W. Huebsch.

"THE WORK OF THE RURAL SCHOOL," by Messrs. J. D. Eggleston and Robert W. Bruère, is announced for September issue by Harper.

G. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY announces a second edition of "Broadway Jones," the first edition being sold out on publication day, August 26th.

GELETT BURGESS' jolly romance, "Love in a Hurry," and Marie Van Vorst's "Amanda of the Mill," a child-labor story, are two new Bobbs-Merrill publications.

THE French government has appropriated 480,000 francs (nearly $100,000) for French representation at the Leipzig international graphic arts exhibition in 1914.

C. W. BARDEEN has just published Thiselton Mark's edition of a noteworthy 17th century educational treatise entitled "A New Discovery of the Old Art of Teaching School."

THE Western frontier at the close of the Revolution is the scene of Randall Parrish's latest romance, "The Maid of the Forest," which McClurg & Co. announce for early issue.

AMANDA M. DOUGLAS, the author of "Sherburne Series," "A Little Girl Series," etc., has just brought out another pleasing volume for girls, "A Modern Cinderella" (Donohue).

THE "Publishers' Trade List Annual" for 1913 has been in process of distribution for a week or more. The "Annual," now in its forty-first year, contains 146 catalogues in the main body of the volume and lists 207 houses in the supplementary division.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS have recently published a half dozen of Emile Gaboriau's detective stories: "Within an Inch of His Life," "The Count's Millions," "The Clique of Gold," "Baron Trigault's Vengeance," "The Champdoce Mystery," and "Caught in the Net."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT will contribute to "Scribner's Magazine" the account of the trip which he will take in the early part of 1914 into the Paraguayan and Brazilian interior, where he expects to travel by canoe and on foot through the great South American tropical forest.

J. F. MEEHAN, the Bath (England) bookseller, continues to fulfill one of the best traditions of the profession of bookselling by publishing from time to time contributions to the antiquarian lore of his district. The latest is a slender but meaty pamphlet, illustrated, on "A few of the famous inns of Bath."

CHILDREN'S verses of the under-side of things entitled, "Behind the Garden Wall," by Robert Wallace, is one of the most attractive volumes on Paul Elder and Company's fall list. It is to have over seventy clever illustrations and decorations in color by Elsinore Robinson Crowell, and will be brightly printed and bound.

D. APPLETON CO.'S new fiction includes "The Red Colonel," by George Edgar, the tale of a band who are alternately desperate thugs and members of exclusive New York and London society; and Margaret Münsterberg's portrayal of a dissatisfied woman's life—"Anna Borden's Career."

"A STURDY LITTLE NORTHLAND" (Eaton & Mains), by T. Harold Grimshaw, is a very readable tribute to the inhabitants of Shetland. "The Gate to the Gospel," by E. E. Helms, and "Plain Thoughts on Faith and Life," by Wellesley P. Coddington, are other new issues from the same publishers.

TO-DAY Richard G. Badger publishes "Who Is My Neighbor?" by J. L. Blanchard. Other new Badger books are: "Lot Barrow," a new novel by Viola Meynell; "A History of English Balladry," by Frank Egbert Bryant; "An Anarchist Ideal," by R. M. Wemley; and "War Time in Manila," by Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske.

SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE in the role of a business man would seem an unfamiliar figure to the readers of his Sherlock Holmes stories, but he is that as a member of the board of directors of Raphael Tuck & Sons, Ltd. Sir Arthur was one of the moving spirits in the recent purchase of the Raphael Tuck & Sons American company by the parent house in London.

Two volumes soon to be issued by Desmond FitzGerald, Inc., are "Out of the North," poems of the Klondike country, by Mr. Howard V. Sutherland; and "My Voyage in the U. S. Frigate Congress, 1845–1846," by Elizabeth D. Van Denburgh, daughter of the Hon. Joel Turrill, Consul-General to the Sandwich Islands during the administration of President Polk.

IN "The Beginnings of Modern Ireland" (Norman, Remington & Co.), Philip Wilson, the author, traces the history of that country from 1500 to the accession of Elizabeth. The same publishers have also issued recently an interesting biographical work, "Bianca Cappello," the life of a Grand Duchess of 16th century Tuscany, by Mary G. Steegmann.

THE Curtis Publishing Company has purchased Toilettes, a fashion publication which has been in that field for twenty-four years and will merge it with the recently announced new Curtis publication Home Journal Fashions. The combined publication will be issued under the new name, The Criterion of Fashion. Toilettes was formerly issued by The Peerless Pattern Company.

WILLIAM HEINEMANN, the English publisher, announces for publication this autumn a Life of W. T. Stead, whose death a year and a half ago in the Titanic disaster is still fresh in public memory. Miss Estelle W. Stead is the author, and the book—which bears the title "My Father: Personal and Spiritual Reminiscences"—will contain a good deal of material from W. T. Stead's own pen.

PROF. C. ALPHONSO SMITH, of the University of Virginia, author of "The American Short Story" (Ginn and Company), has inaugurated a movement among Virginia school teachers for the collection of survivals of old English and Scottish ballads which he has found existing in oral tradition among the mountains of that state. Professor Smith will later edit these survivals and bring them out in book form.

THE recent death in Switzerland of August Bebel, the great leader of the Social Democratic party in Germany, calls renewed attention to the remarkable story of his life, devoted as it was to the cause of improving the condition of the working classes in Germany. The beginning and development of the movement are vividly told in his autobiography published by the University of Chicago Press under the title of "My Life."

"SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION" (Longmans, Green), edited by Rev. H. A. Lester and Canon Morley Stevenson, is a set of sermons and addresses, by eminent British divines, discussing the subject in the light of modern educational ideas. The same publishers have recently issued "The Mental and Physical Life of School Children," by Peter Sandiford, which might serve as a companion-book to the fore-mentioned.

SULLY AND KLEINTEICH have recently published the following books for children: "How to Make Things," by Archibald Williams; "The Girl's Budget of Short Stories," edited by Jean M'Intosh; "The Old Fairy Tales;" "Masterman Ready," by Captain Marryat; "The Story of Heather," by May Wynne; and a series of six daintily illustrated volumes entitled "The Twirly-Whirly Book," "The Dandy-Andy Book," "The Rosie-Posie Book," "The Maisie-Daisie Book," "The Higgledy-Piggledy Book," and "The Georgie-Porgie Book."

MRS. MARY STEWART DAGGETT, the author of "Mariposilla," "The Broad Aisle," "The Higher Court," etc., has just placed with Browne & Howell Company, the manuscript of a charming and unusual little story called "The Yellow Angel," which will be published by this company in the early winter. "The Yellow Angel" is a Chinese cook in Los Angeles, of the gentle, peaceful, masterful type now becoming almost a memory, and the story depicts his gradual development from the simple ideals of his fatherland to the wider outlook of the "Chinese-American."

ONE of the most important mid-western newspaper deals of late years was culminated recently in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, through the purchase by The Torch Press of that city, of the two leading State papers, the Cedar Rapids Republican, and the Evening Times. The Torch Press, which comprises the extensive job printing and bindery departments, also controls The Torch Press Book Shop, and the combined institution including the two newspapers, is now one of the largest printeries west of Chicago. Luther A. Brewer is president, and William Harvey Miner, vice-president.

NEW YORK again heads the ports of the world in gross commerce handled, imports and exports combined. The exact figures are:

A CHINESE romance by Norman Hinsdale Pitman, "The Lady Elect," and a Turkish novel, "A Muslim Sir Galahad," by Henry Otis Dwight, are on Revell's autumn list. Two American stories are also promised: "Doc Williams," a tale of the Middle West, by Charles H. Lerrigo and "Uncle Sam," a story of the Southern mountaineers, by Martha S. Gielow. Other fall issues from this house are "Bradford Horton: Man," a novel by Richard S. Holmes, "Samantha on the Woman Question," by Marietta Holley. "The Torch Bearer," a camp fire story for girls by Mrs. I. T. Thurston, "The Immigrant," by F. J. Haskin and "The Story Life of the Son of Man," by Wayne Whipple.

In answer to a query Printer's Ink estimates the number of national advertisers in this country at something under 5000. It estimates the number of advertising agencies as between 300 and 700, and the annual expenditure for advertising as now approximately $600,000,000. The detailed figures of this latter estimate may be of interest.

Newspaper advertising (retail and general)	$250,000,000
Direct mail advertising (circulars, form letters, etc.)	100,000,000
Magazine advertising	60,000,000
Farm and mail-order advertising	75,000,000
Novelty advertising	30,000,000
Billposting	30,000,000
Outdoor (electric sign, painted sign, etc.)	25,000,000
Demonstration and sampling	18,000,000
Street car advertising	10,000,000
House organs, etc.	7,000,000
Distributing	6,000,000
Theatre programme, curtain and miscellaneous	5,000,000
Grand total	$616,000,000

Some interesting facts are furnished by Reilly & Britton regarding progress made on their $10,000 prize novel contest which closed last week. As an indication of the number of contestants having novels to enter, there were 3,333 requests for information received during the first two months. Of these requests, 2,249 came from men and 1,084 from women. By far the greatest number of inquiries came from the State of New York, which was followed, in the order named, by Illinois, California, and Indiana. Singularly enough, from all New England, once rated as the literary centre of the country, there were not more than 215 letters, while from New York City alone there were 402 letters. During the last month of the contest the manuscripts submitted came in at the rate of fifteen a day. As to the quality of the novels submitted, nothing can be determined until after the contest is closed. The majority of the letters indicate that the writers possess education and some literary skill; but "quite a number show on their face that the writers have no chance for the prize."

The latest offering to the printing trade is the "Typo Index," an annual "Buyers' Guide and Cyclopedia of the Trade," projected and published by a corporation known as The Typo Alliance, made up of manufacturers and jobbers in the printing and allied trades, and having offices at 160 Broadway, New York. The Typo Index will be divided into five sections: Section I. Itemized index and headings; Section II. Alphabetical list of manufacturers and jobbers; Section III. Trade information; Section IV. Trade names, water marks, etc.; Section V. Advertising. Section I will consist of an itemized and cross-indexed list of all the articles, supplies or machinery manufactured, sold or used by the trade, with the names and addresses of all the representative manufacturers and jobbers of each who have submitted their proper listings. Section II will contain the technical, statistical and general information which is constantly needed by the buying, mechanical and other departments. Section III will be an alphabetical list of all representative manufacturers and jobbers who are listed under the various classifications in Section I. Section IV will consist of a complete list of trade names, brands and water marks, with the name of the owner of each, together with the sizes, weights, colors, finishes, and prices of paper, and the dealers, selling agents or distributors carrying these.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Abercrombie, N. D.—M. M. Borman, bookseller and stationer, has suffered a loss by fire.

Bellingham, Wash.—Dr. E. T. Mathes' who, as noted in the Publishers' Weekly of August 9th, recently purchased the Chas. M. Sherman bookstore, desires that all store correspondence be sent to the E. T. Mathes Book Co., rather than to him personally, as he will remain as principal of the Bellingham State Normal School until next June. Mr. Geo. C. Shaw, the manager of the store, received his trade apprenticeship with Robert Clarke, of Cincinnati, in 1891. He writes us: "We are in the market for staple lines only, and all correspondence relating to books and stationery of established selling value hitherto neglected in Bellingham will receive prompt consideration."

Cincinnati, Ohio.—The concern of Emery H. Barton, bookseller, is reported to be in the hands of a receiver.

Coeur D'Alene, Idaho.—The Lakeside Pharmacy Co., booksellers and stationers, has made an assignment.

Columbus, Nebr.—Messrs. Helms & Baumgartner have formed The Columbus News & Stationery Co., and purchased the book and stationery stock of Wood Smith & Co.

Concordia, Kansas.—The Sorgatz Pharmacy and Book Store, F. F. Sorgatz, proprietor, succeeds Geo. G. McEkron.

Freeport, Ill.—Walter J. Young, bookseller, newsdealer and stationer, is in involuntary bankruptcy. The Bank of Freeport is said to be the heaviest creditor.

Hensall, Ont.—Fred McDonnell, bookseller and stationer, has sustained a loss by fire.

Ionia, Mich.—Smith & Smith, druggists and booksellers, have taken W. K. McSween into partnership. The new firm is now Smith & Smith & McSween.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Scofield-Pierson Co. has sold out to R. R. Alderman, bookseller and stationer.

Loup City, Nebr.—Wm. Graefe has succeeded Vaughn & Hinman, druggists, booksellers and stationers.

Melford, Sask.—A. H. Humphries, bookseller and stationer, has retired from business.

Monroe, La.—The Monroe Stationery Co. has met with loss by fire.

Modesto, Cal.—Johnson's, Inc., is now known as the Book Shop.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—The Castner-Knott Dry Goods Co., booksellers and stationers, recently met with a loss by fire.

NEW YORK CITY.—The Leslie-Judge Company and the Housewives League Magazine, have leased space in the building at 31–33 East 27th Street.

OGDEN CITY, UTAH.—The Bramwell Book & Stationery Store, 2362 Washington Street, which has just opened, is fitted up in excellent style, and carries a $15,000 stock. Wilford Bramwell the proprietor, has represented nine large stationery houses during the past few years, and is well known in the trade.

OMAHA, NEB.—A new stationery and book store to be known as the Kieser has been opened. A feature of the store is a reading room where patrons may rest and look over the latest books.

SHELBINA, OHIO.—W. J. Marr has sold his book and stationery store to B. O. Williams.

WINNIPEG, MANI.—A meeting of the creditors of the John A. Hart Co., booksellers and stationers, was recently held.

KILL THAT FLY.

"WE were talking about the house-fly plague. "Oh!' said a lady to me, 'I have seen a five shilling net advertised that will catch them all.' She had cut the advertisement out, and had it in her purse. She produced it for my information. Here it is:

"'The Destruction of Domestic Flies, 5s. net.'

BOOK WANTED (?)

A NEW ENGLAND firm sends us the following:

"A lady came in our store about two weeks ago and asked our book clerk for a copy of "Warren Hyde, by Osgood." He was not familiar with this title, but looked in the United States catalog and found that there was a book by this title, but the author was H. R. Martin. He told the lady that he could get this book but that the author was not Osgood. She, however, doing the errand for someone else, did not leave any order for the book but said that she would let us know later, but that she felt sure that the lady wanted 'Warren Hyde, by Osgood.'" A few days after we got the enclosed letter.

DEAR SIR:

I have heard from the Lady, Mrs. May that ordered A Book, the title of it is waren Hyde, she said she would like you to send for it if the price will not be over 50 or 60 cts., she said she would not mind who the Author was.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTES.

THE combination catalogue, or repertory, of Prussian libraries will, it is announced, be finished shortly in manuscript, certainly by the beginning of 1918. Work on the undertaking goes back to 1895. The printing is to begin shortly, according to R. Fick in the Zentralblatt fur Bibliothekswesen. It is intended to print the whole catalogue, two million titles, in ten years. Six volumes of about 100 pages are to be ready each year. A proof-impression is now being put through by a commission, to which Director Paalzow, Librarian Walther Schulze and Fick belong, making it possible to foresee the finish of the work in the time set. The Prussian libraries will have in it a printed catalogue on a par with those of the British Museum and the National Library of Paris. The bibliographic entries on account of the increasing number of titles have been a good deal cut down, to save time and expense.

Dawson, Arth. Stories from Dutch history; with 16 full-page plates. N. Y., Crowell. 277 p. O. $1.50 n.

The work goes back to the time of the Frisians and Batavians, whom Julius Cæsar brought under Roman rule. The next step recounted of their progress is the introduction of Christianity by the Frankish kings. Chapters follow on the feudal system and the Netherlanders, on the part taken by the Dutch in the Crusades, and on other points where the inhabitants of the Lowlands make their appearance in history. Chapters on the struggle between the Netherlands and Spain are a retelling in simpler form of the classic "Rise of the Dutch Republic." Book concludes with an account of Dutch activities since those terrible years.

Story of a young man of positive charakter facing the stern problem of earning his way in a big school. Incidentally, it treats of certain phases of popularity, and the conflicting demands of school-room and athletic field. The hero is not an imaginary compound of superlatives, but a plain person of flesh and blood, aglow with the hopeful idealism of youth, who succeeds and is not spoiled by success.

Edgar, G: The Red Colonel. N. Y., Appleton. c. 328 p. pls. D. $1.30 n.

The Red Colonel is the leader of the famous "Red Four," a notorious band of criminals who operate in the most extensive manner in the big centers of Europe and America. Wholesale thieving is their specialty, and the Red Colonel in his immaculate evening clothes is responsible for many a daring robbery. When thieves fall out among themselves, trouble begins in earnest. The "Red Four" part bitter enemies. Then, a young doctor, who is betrothed to the step-daughter of one of the gang, suddenly finds himself the center of a whirlwind of excitement. How the determined, resourceful young man fights the cool, suave, devilish Red Colonel and his band of accomplices, makes a most exciting story.

Hodsdon, Helen Merrill. The little window. N. Y., Crowell. c. 87 p. pls. D. 50 c. n.

In the house of a certain stern spinster, one little window has for years had its shutters closed tight, as sign that the owner's heart and home are similarly closed against a younger sister, cast out and disinherited because of her marriage to a local ne'er-do-well. It chances that the strong-minded heroine feels impelled one winter night to attend a lecture in the village lyceum course, the stirring words of the speaker, a so-called "New Thoughter," go straight home to the heart and conscience of the hitherto flinty Miss Lucy, and the same night sees the knocking off of the shutters and the welcoming home of the outcast and her little ones.

A dervish smiles into the eyes of a passing harem beauty. She smiles in return. Her veil drops and then —. No stop watch has been invented that can time the movements of the dare-devil hero—on a wager, Jack Stanton, American, Aladin from Broadway.

Under the Turkish law, Jack is impressed to act as proxy husband so that the girl's seventy-year-old Turkish husband may remarry her after immediate divorce. Returning from Mecca on a wager in which his fortune is at stake, Stanton falls in love with his unexpected wife. He forgets his fortune when she begs him not to desert her—for she doesn't want to go back to the old man. Stanton starts to rescue her, and amazing adventures follow thick and fast.

Johnson, Martin. The magnate or the people; or, lowest instead of highest railroad rates in the world. Milwaukee, Wis., C. N. Caspar Co. c. 307 p. D. $2.

Author believes that public ownership of our railroads means vastly improved economic conditions, purer political conditions, greater opportunities for all, except special privilege and monopoly, and manifold direct and indirect, far reaching benefits and blessings to every man, woman and child in the nation.

Kaler, Ja. Otis, ["James Otis," pseud.] Boy scouts in a lumber camp; il. by Copeland. N. Y., Crowell. c. 334 p. D. $1.25.

Story of a winter spent in the depths of the forests of northern Maine. Some Boy Scouts are offered an opportunity to earn some money by cutting ties during one lumbering season, and under the leadership of a well-qualified scoutmaster they undertake the contract. They run into trouble at once through the presence of some timber thieves, who prove tough subjects to deal with. Finally the scoutmaster turns the tables on the wood pirates by running off their horses, and the outlaws suddenly find themselves cut off from escape, and without food, in the midst of a fearful blizzard. Through a daring rescue, which calls into play all their Scout knowledge, the boys bring the pirates to terms.

Kent, Oliver. Her heart's gift; il. by Paul Stahr. N. Y., Dillingham. c. 334 p. D. $1.25 n.

Richard Waller, the president of the C. F. & S. Co., built a cut-off or spur railroad from a point in the mountains, thus cutting down materially in the cost of shipment charges. Nora Lyndon, his sweetheart, backs all of her 50,000 shares of stock in the scheme, thus insuring her lover's success and the triumphant vindication of her own judgment. He brings her the best he has to offer—himself and marriage. How she receives his offer and why she refuses a conventional marriage, giving him instead her heart's gift of love, makes the story. By the author of "Her right divine."

Lloyd, Nelson. David Malcolm. N. Y., Scribner. c. 413 p. D. $1.35 n.

The hero is a war correspondent; the heroine a young woman he has known in childhood. Her rich, self-made uncle aims to force himself into "society" with the weapons of her charm and beauty; intends her to marry a certain worthless millionaire, in spite of her preference for Malcolm and his love for her. The conflict of these motives gives a story alive with action and peopled with sympathetic characters—especially a certain lovable vagabond-philosopher, a sort of soldier of fortune, who curiously encounters Malcolm on a battlefield, to influence the whole course of his career.

Marshall, E: Broadway Jones, from the play of George M. Cohan; il. from scenes in the play. N. Y., Dillingham. c. 322 p. D. $1.25 n.

A young man tired of the small village is left a fortune and gaily hies him to the glittering street of his dreams. Broadway smiles and puts a thousand greedy fingers into his over-flowing pockets. "Broke" and deeply enmeshed in debt, he falls an easy prey to an ancient lady the past-heroine of many matrimonial adventures, who offers her money in exchange for his youth, wit and popularity.

He is extricated from this amusing but very real dilemma, and finally wins the girl of his heart.

Mason, Alfr. Bishop. Tom Strong, boy-captain; a story of America. N. Y., Holt. c. 318 p. front. D. $1.25 n.

A story of adventure for boys. Tom Strong and a sturdy old trapper take part in such stirring events following the Revolution as the Indian raid with Crawford and a flat-boat voyage from Pittsburgh to New Orleans (meeting Wilkinson). Tom works with a steamboat inventor whom Washington assisted, sees the home life of Washington at Mt. Vernon, goes with letters from him to Franklin and Rufus King—stumbling into Shay's rebellion on the way, etc., etc.

Montague, C. E. The morning's war; a romance. N. Y., Holt. c. 311 p. D. $1.35 n.

The love story of two Anglo-Irish people. The girl is a somewhat introspective Roman Catholic, and the man a high-spirited, unconventional Pagan. Love comes, almost unawares, during an extraordinarily exciting Alpine expedition. The climax, a dramatic surprise, follows an astonishing revelation regarding the hero, while he is a newspaper correspondent in a famine district of Ireland.

Münsterberg, Margarete. Anna Borden's career; a novel. N. Y., Appleton. c. 362 p. pls. D. $1.30 n.

Anna Borden, the beautiful daughter of the American Ambassador to Germany, is loved by an Englishman, but refuses him because "she could never be afraid of him." Returning to America a spell of illness inspires her with a determination to become a nurse. From this she passes into other activities, sampling nearly every phase of life, even down to the squalid depths. Her career is an active and eventful one, but she fails in most of her undertakings because she always "loves the thrill of the moment but never loves a cause." The story, however, closes in most hopeful fashion.

Nicholson, Meredith. Otherwise Phyllis. Bost., Houghton Mifflin. c. 8+397 p. front. D. $1.35 n.

Phyllis is a breezy, sound, independent, and thoroughly charming personality—an out-door girl whose tan never leaves her entirely, even in mid-winter. The people in the Indiana town where she lives are, as she says, "nice and folksy." The book deals with the part she plays in the town's affairs, and shows that while she has a head for business she has also a heart for love. By the author of "A Hoosier Chronicle."

Old (The) fairy tales; or, the milk-white thorn; a book of fairy tales for boys and girls. N. Y. [Sully & Kleinteich]. 189 p. col. pls. O. $1 n.

Ordway, Edith B., comp. The handbook of conundrums. N. Y., Sully & Kleinteich. c. 17+198 p. D. 50 c. n.

The conundrums are culled from the best of the old collections and the best of the new, and from historical and mythological sources. They are arranged for ready reference, and contain allusions to several literatures, including Biblical. The introductory essay defines the place of the conundrum in literature and life, and gives the story of the origin of several famous ones.

Parce, Lida. Economic determinism; or, the economic interpretation of history. Chic., Kerr. c. 155 p. D. $1.

A statement of the theory that changes in laws and customs are the direct and necessary outcome of changes in the methods by which people produce and distribute the food, clothing and shelter which are required to support life. Incidentally the author shows how the position of woman has been and will be affected by past and impending economic changes.

Raine, W: Mac Leod. The vision splendid; a story of to-day; il. by D. C. Hutchison. N. Y., Dillingham. c. 331 p. D. $1.25 n.

Jeff and James K. Farnum are cousins. The former is an idealist, and the latter, a seeker after the soft places of the earth. Fearless and uncompromising, Jeff Farnum boldly fights for better social conditions, while the smug and self satisfied one deals in all manner of graft, political trickery and municipal corruption. After uncovering a remarkable graft scandal, Jeff is "shanghaied" half around the world. The startling disclosures make a fitting climax to the tale and the love-story permits him to attain a justifiable happiness for himself in the end; a happiness unmarred by the exposure of the daring career of his selfish cousin.

Rittenberg, Max. Swirling waters; il. by Mary Lane McMillan. N. Y., Dillingham. c. 352 p. D. $1.25 n.

A story of high finance, telling of a tremendous struggle between two men fighting for supremacy and, incidentally, for the control of the Hudson Bay Flotation Company. Both are financial giants; one, ruthless and unscrupulous, the other endowed with the saving grace of humanness and a finely balanced sense of justice and right. The schemes and counter-schemes; the quick series of dramatic happenings; the gradual rise of Larssen to dominance, as Mathewson is grimly forced back inch by inch—then the striking dènouement, portraying Mathewson's complete and full justification for his strange conduct. They play for a large financial stake, but not for that alone.

Simpson, Harold. The Count of Luxembourg, from the play of George Edwardes; il. from scenes in the play. N. Y., Dillingham. 264 p. D. $1.25 n.

Bribed by a check for £20,000, the impecunious young Count of Luxembourg consents to marry a lady whose name he is not permitted to know and upon whose face he is not allowed to gaze. Not only that, but he must agree to divorce her at the end of three months, immediately leaving Paris upon the completion of the ceremony, which takes place with the Count upon one side of the screen and the lady upon the other. Neither of the participants could obtain so much as the barest glimpse of the other, nevertheless the young people succeed outwitting circumstances and become in truth all in all into each other.

Reference List of New Publications

Recorded in JULY, 1913

This Reference List enters the books recorded during the month under (1) author, in Clarendon type, anonymous books having Clarendon type for the first word; (2) title in Roman; (3) subject-heading in SMALL CAPS; (4) name of series in Italics.

A colon after initial designates the most usual given name, as: A: Augustus; B: Benjamin; C: Charles; D: David; E: Edward; F: Frederick; G: George; H: Henry; I: Isaac; J: John; L: Louis; N: Nicholas; P: Peter; R: Richard; S: Samuel; T: Thomas; W: William.

For books received sizes are given in CAPS, Q, O, D, etc., books not received sizes are given in Roman numerals, 4o, 8o, 12°, etc. Prices are added except when not supplied by publisher or obtainable only on specific request. Where not specified the binding is cloth.

Those desiring to learn the entire publishing output of the month in any one field should look under one of the following MAIN HEADINGS:

PHILOSOPHY	MEDICINE	LITERATURE
RELIGION AND THEOLOGY	AGRICULTURE	POETRY
SOCIOLOGY	HOUSEHOLD ECONOMICS	DRAMA
LAW	BUSINESS	FICTION
EDUCATION	ENGINEERING, TECHNOLOGY	BIOGRAPHY
PHILOLOGY	FINE ARTS	GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL
SCIENCE	GAMES, SPORTS, AMUSEMENTS	HISTORY

Besides the titles listed under each of these headings cross reference is made from each to a limited number of cognate headings which collectively give all the new publications of the month in the given subject or group of subjects.

Inquirers looking for books on a specific topic should look under the general subject to which that topic belongs, i.e. GEOLOGY rather than SILURIAN PERIOD; MATHEMATICS rather than CALCULUS; ECONOMICS rather than WAGES. Books regarding specific Religious denominations, countries and persons, however, should still be sought for under their individual names.
